Having made preparations for a large trade this fall, I have on hand an immense stock of face and ordinary Parlor Suits, of which I want to dispose of 100 to 150 Suits this month in order or make room and give employment to my workmen through the winter. Those who want to furnish their parlors now have a chance to purchase at New Flork prices and save expense of freight and packing and get the goods delivered in good order. Very respectfully, any reason why she should not be elected to such a position; but so long as such pests as Woodhull, Claflin, Livermore, Dickinson and Logan are permitted to avoid an endless tugging and dove-tailing the Senatorial succession. Mr. McCreens entered the field with an overwhelming plurality, and, by an extraordinary display of good-will and self-sacrifice, his competors gave way to him, securing his ute is undeserved. No man has more friends, or warmer friends, than Mr. Mc-CREERY, and, being the choice of the Green-river country besides, his election became in a manner a matter of course. who is on the comb of the wave now and can afford to be criticised with freedom, if we speak plainly and candidly of the situation which the result at Frankfort creates. We repeat, what we said yester-day, we regard the Congressional prospect with apprehension.

Mr. McCreery goes to Washington to sit as the colleague of Governor STEVEN-son in the Senate of the United States. The two are eager private enemies. They hate each other. They distrust each other. There is a feud between them and their friends. No man will deny that this is seriously unfortunate for the public inte seriously unfortunate for the public interest. It matters not what causes led to it, or who is to blame for it, the fact is in every way a mischance; and we are free tosay—declaring the kindliest feeling for Senator McCherry—that, considering the circumstance, we should have sacrificed him on the altar of the State. To do so might have been unjust. But personal might have been unjust. But persons claims can not be considered before great Legislature took a more sentimental view of it. Recognizing the Senator's popula-ity and sectional claim, and sharing a certain undefined sympathy which exists all over the State, it turned away from BECK, BRANLETTE and HUMPHREY MAR BECK, BRANLETTE and HUNFHREY MAR-SHALL and gave its support to the candi-date whom its predecessor had set aside. There are those who may regard this as a courteous call on Gov. STRYKESON to re-sign the place he holds. Mr. McCRERY and his friends assuredly consider it a per-sonal triumph over Gov. STRYKESON; and your likely this will be the general verdict. It is most unfortunate. Gov. STEVENSON will not resign. Sensible people will not expect him to do so. Thus presently we shall have our two Democratic Senators at swords points, working by cross purposes, each having his partisans and both sarped by their feelings; and this at a time when the Democratic party in Congress needs to work in concert, to pull all together, to go like a clock. We repeat that we know not and care not which Senator is at fault. The curcumstance is lamentable to the Kentucky interest and to the Democratic restauctions.

eratic party interest in the national capital. Nor do we expect it to be mitigated by arance of the rival politicians of CREERY is a man of strong likes and dis-likes, a man of an unforgiving temper, and he will go to Washington full of the defi-ant spirit of victory. Governor STEVEN-ton, on the other hand, though possessed of a temperate and conciliatory disposi-tion, can make no overtures of peace with-out dishonor. So there we have it. One Senator pulls one way and the other Sen-ator pulls one way and the other Sen-ator pulls a different way, and Kentucky is to fall between the two stools!

Mr. McCreen reeds to be reminded of these things, for he alone can in a measure do something to relieve the burden which his election will put upon the Democratic party in Congress. Flatterers he will have CREERY is a man of strong likes and dis-

But, in our own have given him support when it was needed. We therefore take leave to speak to him with blues as him that the people will expect him to carry himself with regard to their interests, and to discover how the four hundred Chevekee Indians got their names on the pension rolls while Mr. Hartan was Secretary of the Interior. The present Secretary can tell how the names were got off

It is natural that Brick should seek an avenue of escape and should be willing to give up the commanding position which he has in the House for peace, stability, and quiet in the Senate, where his peculiar Congressional talents would not show so well.

We think we can suggest a remedy for all this. Let the Legislature pass an act under which it shall not be necessary for a Congressman to reside in the district for which he is chosen. Then we can get all of our members out of the Ashland district or, as a prose-poet and story-taller, to any memory of middle-aged people, when the magazines engaged the current attention which, during the last ten or a dozen years, has been lavished on the daily newsyears, has been lavished on the dally newspapers. When Thackers started the Cornhill Magazine there was a sort of flutter even in the rural districts of America; and the power and popularity of Harper's Monthly may be likened to the place in public esteem now held by Harper's Week. ly, which seems to have overshadowed its older and slower brother. People looked with a sort of eagerness to the coming of with a sort of eagerness to the coming of their favorite serials. Newspapers were absorbed by political interests and were absorbed by political interests and were not of universal, or even very general, currency. Women and children rarely opened them. They relied on the magazines for their reading. But the war changed all this. The daily journals became at once household, as they had been counting room, necessities. Old grand-mothers, young wives, little boys and girls, turned with one impulse to the news from the seat of arms; the scope of the press was enlarged; and a taste for newspaper reading was diffused. There passed a shadow over literature and over the periodicals; and whether this ever rolls away is a thing to be tested only by the event. The publishers are doing what they can The publishers are doing what they can by increased enterprise to dissipate it, and, of consequence, the new year sets out with what, in 1851, would have been rewith what, in 1801, would have been regarded as a prodigious display of wares.

Advance sheets of the Atlantic Monthly for January have reached us, and they are brim-full of both performance and promise. The number opens with a New England tradition, lacking somewhat for dramatic incident and power, which relates how MARTEA HILLTON.

"A thin slip of a girl, like a new moon, Sure to be rounded into beauty soon"— Sure to be rounded into beauty soon "became first a servant-girl, and then the wife of old Governor Wentworks. A not very pleasing story, something trite and common-place, and but fairly told it is, and yet we find Mr. LONGFELLOW'S name at the end of it. The most skilled literature is not became the server of the service of the server o teur is not always at his best. The post-humous and recently-discovered novel of NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE follows. This moves out of the shadows like a deep, si-lent, slow-flowing stream, overladen with a crest of flowers, under which the play and flash of the current is barely a crest of flowers, under which the play and flash of the current is barely visible, or like a dead march played in a minor key, through which we feel rather than hear the melody. It is entitled "Septimius Felton, or the Elixir of Life;" is located near the villages of Concord and Lexington, and is, of course, a romance of the Revolution. The first installment presents as three characters, two young men, SETTIMUS PRINTON and ROBERT HAGBUEN. "Ind one young woman, ROSE GALTITLD, on a hillside. The dialogue is of the House-of-the-Seven-Gable sort, and the descriptions remind one of the "Blitbdale Romance." The red-costs come of a sudden, and the number closes with a well-told scene in which a young British officer snatches a kiss from Rose. Thus: message we certainly couldn't have for-gotten it.

Thus:

Mr. Parrow's initial chapter, "Thomas Jefferson's College Days," is terse, picturesque, and gossipping, in every way fresh and readable. Those of our politicians who alternately pine for a white man's party and invoke the spirit of the sage of Monticello might read it with instruction, if not with delight. Mr. EDMUND C. STEDMAN'S poem, "The Heart of New England," is pretty, plaintive, and musically done. Professor James Dr. Mille begins a story in this number of the Atlantic, and has hit upon of the Atlantic, and has hit upon a capital title, "A Comedy of Ter-rors." I have days after he left, his hat, was found on the canal near the river. This occumustance is the control of the canal near the river. This occumustance will be a supposed to have been Rilled, and some think it is possible that he may have committed middle or have been Rilled, and some think it is possible that he got drunk and accidentally fell into the river. Mrs. Bateman is deeply distressed, and goes about the city deary day inquiring after her missing busband, the is represented as being a vary gonithemally and sober Irishman, and his long stay from home, apart from the finding of the hat, indicates very strongly that he has met with foul play or serious accident. A fortune-celler informed the wife that hes husband was not dead, and would return, and af first the statement was credulously believed and socied upon, but his absence has been so prolonged that even credulity is at fault. The woman is poor and has two children to care for and is really a worthy object of pity.
